I enjoy receiving gift. My best gift received is a cellphone. I'm going to tell you why it is so special. Why I like it so much.

My best gift was a cellphone. Why it was my best gift is I get to talk to my friends. I get to play games on my cellphone. I also get to play online. That's why a cellphone is my best gift.

A cellphone is special to me I get to talk to family. If I get a emergency I get to call people up. It's also special I get it on my birthday. I have wanted it for a long time. It's also special I don't have to pay my bill just pay as I go. That's why it's special to me.

Why I like my cellphone so much. It's a gift from my mother and father. My Uncle pays my bill but my mother and father got it for me. I like it even more I get to talk into I fall asleep. I like to call my friends up on my cell phone. I just enjoy my cellphone so much. That's why I like it so much.

In conclusion I just enjoy my cellphone, and I like my cellphone, it's very special to me. So go ahead and buy a cellphone and talk on it to the battery goes low.

Score Point: 3

This response reflects a limited degree of proficiency in expository writing skills. A favorite gift is chosen (a cell phone), and many reasons are provided to explain the writer's selection (I get to talk to my friends, talk to family, and I don't have to pay my bill). Because the key ideas are so repetitive, the response is inadequately developed. The writer displays limited word choice. An organizational strategy is attempted, but similar ideas are not clustered. A pattern of errors in usage and sentence structure is displayed.
